BREAKING:

LINKSHELL BANK STOLEN

In a shocking turn of events, a notorious player, Eskae, has betrayed his own linkshell, HydraCorps, and stolen millions of gil from their shared bank account. The motive behind this heist was to fund his purchase of a rare and powerful relic weapon which he had been coveting for some time.

Eskae, who has played the game since the beginning of last year, had gained the trust and respect of his fellow players. He was leader and had access to the bank account where they stored their collective earnings from raids, quests, and trades. He had also contributed a large amount of gil to the account, making him seem loyal and generous.

However, unbeknownst to his comrades, Eskae had a secret plan to betray them and take all their gil. He had been eyeing a third relic weapon, a legendary item with incredible stats and abilities, and was considered one of the most coveted items in the game. The price of the relic was astronomical, and Eskae knew he could not afford it on his own.

So, he decided to use his position and influence to execute his scheme. He waited for the right moment, when most of the members were offline or busy with other activities. He then logged into the bank account and transferred all the gil to his personal account. He quickly logged off once everything was secured.

The theft was discovered soon after by one of the members who tried to withdraw some gil from the bank account. He was shocked to see that the balance was zero, and alerted the others. They checked the transaction history and saw that Eskae had taken everything. They tried to contact him, but he had blocked them all.

ESKAE FUNDS THIRD RELIC WEAPON

They also searched for him in the game, but he was set to "Away". He had effectively vanished with everything. The members of HydraCorps were outraged and devastated by the betrayal. They had considered him a friend and a leader, and had trusted him with their hard-earned gil. They felt cheated and violated by his actions, and vowed to find him and make him pay.

"He was like a brother to me. We had been through so much together. I can't believe he would do this to us. He stole our money, our trust, and our dignity. He is the worst kind of scum, and I hope he rots in hell." said one of the members, who wished to remain anonymous.

"This is a huge blow to our group. We had been saving up for a long time to buy some upgrades and enhancements for our group. We had a lot of plans and goals that we wanted to achieve together. Now, we have nothing. We have to start from scratch, and rebuild our reputation and our finances. It's not fair. It's not right." said another member, who also requested anonymity.

The incident has also sparked a debate among the gaming community about the ethics and security of shared bank accounts. Some players have expressed sympathy and solidarity with the victims, and condemned Eskae's actions as immoral and criminal. Others have argued that Eskae was simply playing the game, and that he had the right to do whatever he wanted with his gil. They also pointed out linkshells and shared banks are risky and vulnerable to abuse, and that players should be more careful and cautious with their money and their trust.

The server staff have not yet commented on the matter, and it is unclear if they will take any action against Eskae. The HydraCorps members have reported the theft to the game authorities, and have asked for their help in tracking down Eskae and recovering their money. They have also posted a bounty on Eskae's head, offering a reward to anyone who can find him and bring him to justice.
